Activity 1 Investigating the Refractory Period of Cardiac Muscle

1. 1. Explain why the larger, slower waves on the oscilloscope represent contractions of ventricles.

The contractions are larger (ventricles) because when they contract they generate more force than those producing in larger waves.

2. Explain why the amplitude of the waves did not change when you increased the frequency of the stimulation. (Hint: Relate your response to the refractory period of the cardiac action potential.) How well did the results compare with your prediction?

The amplitude did not change because after long absolute refractory period of cardiac myocytes, which prevents them from developing another action during contraction.

3. 2. Why is it only possible to initiate an action potential during refractory?

The absolute refractory period prevents another action potential because it has a refractory time when the cell is not excitable.

4. Explain why waves summation and tetanus are not produced in cardiac muscle.

Wave summation and tetanus are not produced in cardiac muscle because it has a relatively long absolute refractory period. Unlike skeletal muscle, which can almost completely overcome the refractory period of cardiac muscle. Limited overlap between each cell and immediately after contraction period and tetanus is not formed as normal as that seen in skeletal muscle.

Activity 2 Examining the Effect of Vagus Nerve Stimulation

1. 1. Explain the effect of vagus nerve stimulation based on what you know. How well did the results compare with your prediction?

2. The vagus nerve stimulates the heart via the parasympathetic nervous system. The vagus nerve stimulates the heart by slowing the heart rate.

3. Explain how the vagus nerve slows the heart rate by stimulating parasympathetic vagal stimulation. The vagus nerve stimulates the heart rate by stimulating parasympathetic nervous system and the release of ACh, slowing the heart rate.

4. Describe how the sympathetic nervous system affects the heart rate.
