Psych 100 – Chapter 1: The Science of Psychology

- Psychology is the study of human behaviour
- The ultimate goal of psychological research is to understand human behaviour why people do what they do

Causal event-an even which causes another event

- Psychological research is performed to explain the different types of behaviours analyzing the cause of each

There are 12 fields of psychology we will focus on:

1.   Physiological-study of physiology of organism to understand causal events in human behaviour

2.   Comparative-study of behaviour of a variety of species, attempting to explain behaviour in terms of evolutionary adaption

3.   Behavioural analysis-studies effect of environment on behaviour
-Behaviours producing + effects repeated, - are not

4.   Behavioural genetics- studies role of genetics in behaviour
-look into what behaviours can be passed on genetically

5.   Cognitive-studies mental processes and complex behaviours like perception
-research helps us to discover brain function in response to events

6.   Cognitive Neuroscience-studies brain mechanisms responsible for cognitive processes, studies damaged brain to find functions

7.   Developmental-studies the physical, emotional, cognitive and social development of children mainly

8.   Social-looks into the effect of people on other's behaviours

9.   Personality-catergorizes and understands the causes of an individuals difference in behavioural patterns

10. Evolutionary-explains behaviour in terms of adaptive advantages that propagate specific behaviour

11. Cross-cultural-studies the effects of culture on behaviour

12. Clinical-investigation and treatment of abnormal behaviour and psychological disorders

Physiological Roots of Psychology:

- we are all aware of out own existence, it is believed that this consciousness tends to relate to our own behaviours

Animism-believed at one time that our behaviour was governed by spirits

- Rene Descartes looked into natural phenomena using sensory experience and human reasoning

Reflex-automatic response to a stimulus

Dualism-belief that reality consists of mind and matter
