CATALOG NO.: HS 11
LOCATION: Eastern Campus
SEMESTER: Spring 2008

TEXT

1. Chambers, M. et al. The Western Experience, Vol. 1, 9th edition, McGraw-Hill, 2007. The textbook has a supplementary webpage which can be found at:

http://highered.mcgraw-hill.com/sites/0072883693/student_view0/index.html

- Although the textbook is a very important learning tool, it will never be used in class. It is to be used outside of class during study time. Under no circumstance should students be reading the textbook during lectures. Be on the safe side and leave the textbook at home or in your car!

2. Students must supply their own Scantron forms and pencils for the mid-term and final examinations. Scantron forms are available in the college bookstore.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

Before all else, the objective of this course is to help students transform themselves into scholars. In this process, if students are successful, they will be able to:

- Describe the roots of Western Civilization and indicate how an understanding of past events helps to better comprehend present society.
- Form judgments about the nature of history as well as the validity of popular and scholarly historical theories.
- Demonstrate an "historical awareness" by citing specific examples of how human behavior changes through time with reference to family, government, environment, and interaction with foreign cultures.
- Identify the basic links and interactions between Western and non-Western civilizations such as ancient Mesopotamian and European cultures, Islamic and Byzantine civilizations, and European colonialism in the Western hemisphere.
- Show the value of historical research by becoming acquainted with primary and secondary materials.
- Practice writing, thinking, and comprehension skills in tests and reading and writing assignments.

THE ROLE OF THE STUDENT AND THE ROLE OF THE PROFESSOR

As stated above, the primary objective of this course is to help students transform themselves into scholars. Becoming a scholar is one of the most rewarding endeavors a person can undertake, however, it is a difficult and arduous process that can only be accomplished if a student is highly motivated. Before beginning any course of study, a student must assume full responsibility for making this process work. Just showing up at college does not transform someone into a scholar. College in general, and this course specifically, is not designed for passive learners. Students must take control of their education and exert serious effort in the completion of assignments. If a student takes responsibility for their education and works hard, they will come away from this course with more than just a familiarity of the major events of western history. Successful students will have a sense of self-respect for having pushed themselves beyond what they thought themselves capable of.

The professor teaching this course is a scholar. However, it is impossible for the professor to make you a scholar. The professor can only recognize your efforts at making yourself a scholar. One of the professor's duties is to share his knowledge of the subject and his life experiences with you in his lectures. Hopefully, this may help inspire you to work at becoming a scholar yourself. In addition to lecturing, the professor will act as discussion moderator and facilitator of student interaction in this class. Finally, the professor will act as umpire and judge of your progress towards becoming a scholar by grading your tests and writing assignments.
