

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a series of physical fitness tests. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL and physical fitness compared to the control group. The improvement in HRQL was most pronounced in the physical function, role-physical, and vitality domains. The improvement in physical fitness was most pronounced in the aerobic capacity, muscular strength, and flexibility measures. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged men.

The `String` interface of Java 7 introduces the `compareToIgnoreCase` method. It returns an integer value that indicates the relative order of the strings. A negative value indicates that the string is less than the other string, a positive value indicates that the string is greater than the other string, and zero indicates that the strings are equal.
