

5 Major Perspectives in Psychology

Psychology is the scientific study of how we think, feel, and behave. In this module, you'll get an introduction to the four major perspectives that have shaped modern psychological research.

Why do you act the way you do? These questions interested early psychologists and they did their early experiments hoping to find out what it was like. On today's psychology course, theories have been refined. These theories acknowledge what we know about how we think and feel and the various things that are behind the psychology that drives how we behave in a social or personal way.

These theories provide a way of thinking about psychology. In 1970, psychologists have created various theories of human behaviour and are generally more concerned with the social influences on the psychology of people. It's important to know that psychologists are not all the same. The field of psychology is divided into many different areas, including biological psychology, developmental psychology, experimental psychology, and social psychology. Each of these is a part of psychology that gives us a different view of psychology.

Biological Perspective: Key points

Biological psychologists look at how the nervous system, hormones, and genetics influence our behaviour. Biological psychologists might also be interested in how the brain works. They might also be interested in how the brain works. They might also be interested in how the brain works. They might also be interested in how the brain works.

So what does this mean? It means that for the biological approach, you are the sum of your parts. Your brain is your physical body and it's the only part of you that you can see. Your brain is the only part of you that you can see. Your brain is the only part of you that you can see. Your brain is the only part of you that you can see. Your brain is the only part of you that you can see.

Psychodynamic Perspective: Key points

The psychodynamic approach was developed by Sigmund Freud, who believed that many of our behaviours are driven by our mind. Psychodynamic theories focus on the mind and the unconscious mind. They focus on the mind and the unconscious mind. They focus on the mind and the unconscious mind. They focus on the mind and the unconscious mind.

There are a lot of things about Freud's theory that are really interesting. But what does it mean? It means that something about us is not just the way we are. It means that something about us is not just the way we are. It means that something about us is not just the way we are. It means that something about us is not just the way we are. It means that something about us is not just the way we are.

Behavioural Perspective

Behavioural psychologists believe that external environmental stimuli influence our behaviour. Behavioural psychologists believe that external environmental stimuli influence our behaviour. Behavioural psychologists believe that external environmental stimuli influence our behaviour. Behavioural psychologists believe that external environmental stimuli influence our behaviour.

Psychological Responses to Violations of Expectations: Perspectives and Answers from Diverse Fields of Psychology

Mario Gollwitzer, Anna Thorwart, Karin Meissner, 2018-03-19 From Pavlov's dog expecting food when hearing a bell to stereotypes as expectations about other people's behaviour from Bandura's self-efficacy as expectation for success and failure of one's own behaviour to the predictive brain concept in current perception theories expectations have been a central construct in different areas of psychological research. In each of these areas specific concepts, theoretical approaches and empirical methods have been developed to explain when and why expectations persist and when they do not. Many theories assume that expectations are likely to change in the face of disconfirming evidence. However, sometimes expectations persist even though they are empirically violated, suggesting that they can be sticky under certain circumstances. But what are these circumstances? And what are the psychological mechanisms that can explain why and when expectations persist or change after being confronted with expectation violating evidence? Each contribution of the current book offers insights into individuals' reactions to violations of expectations. They show that many pieces of the puzzle have been collected in the many sub-disciplines of psychology and that putting them together in an integrative fashion stays a fascinating enterprise. Real

World Psychology Catherine A. Sanderson, Karen R. Educational Perspectives Sarit Ashkenazi,Orly Rubinsten,Bert De Smedt,2017-10-05 Converging evidence demonstrates a strong link between reading and mathematics multiple cognitive processes are shared between reading and mathematics including the representation and retrieval of symbolic information attention working memory and cognitive control Additionally multiple brain networks are involved in both math and reading and last common genetic factors might influence both reading and math Hence it comes as no surprise that there are meaningful associations between aspects of math and reading abilities Moreover comorbidity rates between math learning disabilities MD and reading disabilities RD are high up to 66% and prevalence rate of the comorbid condition is reported to be more common than the prevalence rate of isolated math learning disabilities Accordingly the goal of the research topic is to explore the underline mechanisms of this overlap between reading and math The research topic aims to include the following topics Genetics it has been found that both RD and MD are based on genetic factors and run in families Moreover math problem solving shares significant genetic overlap with general cognitive ability and reading decoding whereas math fluency shares significant genetic overlap with reading fluency and general cognitive ability Hence this topic will explore the shared and unique genetic risk factors to RD and MD In addition to shared and unique genetic influence on reading and math Neural perspective converging evidence from both structural and multiple functional imaging studies involving a wide range of numerical tasks points to the intraparietal sulcus IPS as a core region that involve in quantity manipulation However several additional brain areas such as frontoparietal and temporoparietal areas were found to be involved in numerical tasks Individuals with MD show deficits in a distributed set of brain regions that include the IPS fusiform gyrus in posterior brain regions and pre frontal cortex regions Similarly converging evidence indicate that the left hemisphere regions centered in the fusiform gyrus temporoparietal cortex and pre frontal cortex regions are strongly involve in typical reading and present lower activity connectivity or abnormal structure in RD Thus there is a meaningful neural overlap between reading and math Hence the authors can submit empirical studies on the role of several of brain regions that are involved in math and reading commonality and diversity both in the typical and a typical development Cognitive factors that play role in mathematics and reading and comorbidity between RD and MD There is a long lasting debate whether MD and RD originate from unique cognitive mechanisms or not Multiple cognitive processes are shared between reading and mathematics Therefore impairments in any one of domain general skills could conceivably play an important role in both pure and comorbid conditions Moreover it has been suggested that phonological processing has a significant role in some aspects of numerical processing such as retrieval of arithmetical facts Education it will be interesting to look at the effect of interventions that aim to improve reading such as phonological awareness and there transfer effect on improving mathematical processing Alternatively it will be good to test whether math interventions will improve reading
