The Weather Channel's coverage of the hurricane was a success in terms of ratings, but it was also a failure in terms of content. The channel's coverage was criticized for being too sensational and for focusing too much on the destruction of property and the loss of life. The channel's coverage was also criticized for being too slow and for not providing enough information about the hurricane's path and the impact it would have on the region.

ally, according to the original provision in "The Maryland Free and Open Market Act," farmers would be permitted to sell their produce on a 10% commission to the market. But the judges, Brown, Chief Justice, and Harlan, dissenting, argued that the act's provision for a 10% commission was an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, which was the province of Congress, not the state.
