

volunteers to just be an extra adult to watch kids. All I had to do was give a resume and talk with the coordinator as to why I wanted to volunteer. So they let me help out with a Photoshop class and an open hang out time. I got to talk to some middle schoolers and get to know them, which was neat. I think if I had proposed another type of activity for the students and offered to run it, they would've let me.

So I feel like there might be some sort of opportunity there at the local middle schools near our churches, though it would require some long-term investment and a lot of relationship building at first. I like how middle schoolers are pretty open to talking with adults, particularly if it's a comfortable context for them, like at a school. I definitely think we should focus our efforts on middle school or even younger, like 5th graders, and go to where they are at.

But again, to do that, people need flexible work. I was lucky to also have VTO at the time, and so I had that to excuse myself away from work. But I think for people doing youth ministry, they need to expect to have to work at night, if they are not working in the afternoon. So something in the ministry schedule needs to accommodate that, because realistically, afternoons are the time to reach students.

Lots of good ideas here! I'm feeling more and more the need to pivot towards the youth as there are many opportunities out there. But we definitely need a dedicated youth team to be focused on finding the youth as well as building relationships long-terms. Over here in Pittsburgh, we've been trying to start up a youth ministry. It's been helpful to have Eric and Kat here to focus on youth as they've been able to make some inroads.

It's also neat in that it creates an outlet for our college students to serve and learn to love the youth. Many college students have a soft spot for youth, and I've found that they're more willing to sacrifice their time/schedule for youth than for other things. And it's also increased their heart for ministry.

We currently have a group of 5 sophs/juniors who have been going twice a month to other church youth groups to run programs & talks. And we had this neat story this past week: For our monthly youth visit to the UMC youth group in Norwin, one of our juniors, E, was stressed about school and all the stuff that she had to do. But she wanted to honor her commitment, so she went. While there, she got to spend time a lot of time talking to a 5th grade girl. At the end of the night, the youth pastor had people share one high and one low from their week. That girl shared that her low is struggling with depression. But her high was making a new friend – and then she walked over to E and hugged her. That really impacted E and made it all worth it.

With all that people have been going thru these past few years, I think there are many youth who are just like this 5th grade girl - who need someone to show them love and care. And we as a church are uniquely trained and equipped to be a blessing to them.

Lessons from Element Oakland Ministry

I'm really excited and burdened for our church to pivot to youth ministry!

We've been doing Element Oakland ministry since 2020. In 2019 we had a homegroup of Element HS in Alameda to allow our Oakland students to reach their friends more easily. The following year we formally
