

Should School Uniforms Required in All Schools?

No, they are only mandatory in some schools. Whether schools should have basic school uniforms is still a controversial topic in many school districts. In many schools, uniforms can be very distracting, unhelpful with violence and bullying, and are a financial burden to some families.

In England 1222, the first school uniforms were introduced. In the 16th century, the first modern uniforms were created and worn. Since then have uniforms changed and now uniforms are suppressing teens style in many schools. Some people say that uniforms encourage learning while others beg to differ. Many students say uniforms are uncomfortable and distracting. Also when teens have always been told what to where they don't learn the skill if what is appropriate and not appropriate for school(Should High School Students...). The classic school uniform can violate the student's privilege of expressing themselves through the way they dress. Most students, about 90 percent, say that they highly dislike school uniforms and find them as an annoyance(Uniforms Make Schools...). Almost every adult makes their own clothing for that day. They have the ability to express themselves through their own individual clothing choice. When kids and teens are not allowed to create these choices on their own it can delay the transition into adulthood. Most students can find that their school uniform is way less comfortable than their other clothes. That can lead to the student being less productive. School uniforms can be a major distraction from the purpose of school. A schools purpose is to educate the youth (School Uniforms).

In middle and high school teacher and staff are promoting diversity, having students wear uniforms is the entire opposite of the appreciation of individuality. Chicago middle school student, Kyler Sumter says that ""They decide to teach us about people like Rosa Parks, Susan B. Anthony, and Booker T. Washington... We learn about how these people expressed themselves and conquered and we can't even express ourselves in the hallways."" (School Uniforms). When uniforms are a requirement it takes away the option of what outfit expresses you. When that factor is removed students are more likely to express themselves in ways that they are less appropriate. The teens years are a time of exploration and a time where you discover yourself. This is prominent in the way teens dress for school every day. Often teens find that their school uniforms are boring, suppress their own personal style, and limit their choice of fashion(Should High School Students...).

Another reason that uniforms should not be mandatory in schools is that they are no help to violence and bullying in schools. The classic school uniform can violate the student's privilege of expressing themselves through the way they dress. School uniforms can cause those students to be a target for bullying by kids from other schools. In many public schools, uniforms are very difficult to enfo
