While increasingly becoming the site of a new wave of development, the city is not without its problems. In the mid-1990s, the city's declining population (a combination of out-migration and stagnant in-migration) led to a decline in the city's tax base. The city's declining tax base has led to a decline in the city's services, and the city's declining services have led to a decline in the city's tax base. The city's declining tax base has led to a decline in the city's services, and the city's declining services have led to a decline in the city's tax base. Two findings are particularly noteworthy in this respect. First, a majority of respondents (64%) are using a product that is designed specifically for mobile devices, and it is encouraging to learn that 80% of those who do not use a dedicated mobile device also use applications designed for such devices. This means that 84% of respondents are using some type of mobile device or application.
