

Quantitative Association Rules

- Proposed by Lent, Swami and Widom ICDE'97
- Numeric attributes are dynamically discretized
 - Such that the confidence or compactness of the rules mined is maximized
- 2-D quantitative association rules: $A_{\text{quan1}} \wedge A_{\text{quan2}} \Rightarrow A_{\text{cat}}$
- Cluster adjacent association rules to form general rules using a 2-D grid
- Example

$\text{age}(X, "34-35") \wedge \text{income}(X, "30-50K")$
 $\Rightarrow \text{buys}(X, "high\ resolution\ TV")$

Social Implications of Research in Higher Education Mdikana, Andile Alfred, 2025-05-29 Traditional research assumes a singular almost absolutist approach to knowledge In contrast critical theory challenges the positivist outlook on scientific research and assumes a more socio cultural outlook on the social world In specific terms critical research examines the nature of power dynamics influencing the social world More broadly this has implications for understanding inequality and disparity across cleavages of race gender ethnicity sexual orientation and economic class among other differences in identity Furthermore rather than simply acknowledging the subjective nature of the social world critical research calls for fundamentally transforming perceptions and attitudes in a manner that views marginalized populations more equitably Social Implications of Research in Higher Education examines the social implications of research confounded by culturally reinforced presumptions such as stereotypes and other biases that privilege those in power It analyzes research aimed at benefiting marginalized or oppressed populations who lack the same opportunities and benefits that are otherwise granted to those in mainstream society Covering topics such as service learning university community engagement and research translation this book is an excellent resource for social justice advocates sociologists researchers professionals scholars academicians and more

VLSI Design Methodologies for Digital Signal Processing Architectures Magdy A. Bayoumi, 2012-12-06

Designing VLSI systems represents a challenging task. It is a transformation among different specifications corresponding to different levels of design abstraction: behavioral, structural, and physical. The behavioral level describes the functionality of the design. It consists of two components: static and dynamic. The static component describes operations, whereas the dynamic component describes sequencing and timing. The structural level contains information about components, control, and connectivity. The physical level describes the constraints that should be imposed on the floor plan: the placement of components and the geometry of the design. Constraints of area, speed, and power are also applied at this level. To implement such multilevel transformation, a design methodology should be devised, taking into consideration the constraints, limitations, and properties of each level. The mapping process between any of these domains is non-isomorphic. A single behavioral component may be transformed into more than one structural component. Design methodologies are the most recent evolution in the design automation era, which started off with the introduction and subsequent usage of module generation, especially for regular structures such as PLA's and memories. A design methodology should offer an integrated design system rather than a set of separate, unrelated routines and tools. A general outline of a desired integrated design system is as follows:

- Decide on a certain unified framework for all design levels.
- Derive a design method based on this framework.
- Create a design environment to implement this design method.
