Oceans are Earth's body of salty water. There are five oceans in the world. Oceans are very deep and wide, and they cover 73 percent of the world's surface. Many people like oceans because they have many kinds of living things. For example, there are fish, crabs and dolphins. People depend on oceans. We get a lot of food from them. Guide to Best Practices for Ocean Acidification Research and Data Reporting, 2011. The ocean presently takes up one fourth of the carbon dioxide emitted to the atmosphere by human activities, thereby increasing ocean acidity. While our understanding of the possible consequences of ocean acidification is still rudimentary, both the scientific community and the society at large are increasingly concerned about the potential risks associated with ocean acidification for marine organisms and ecosystems. The number of scientists involved in ocean acidification research grew rapidly over the past few years and will continue to rise with the launch of new coordinated national programmes. Students, young researchers, and established scientists inexperienced with the intricacies of the seawater carbonate chemistry and perturbation experiments will enter the field and will benefit from guidelines and standards for ocean acidification research. The European Project on Ocean Acidification (EPOCA) and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) initiated the process that led after an open community review to the production of this guide.
