Tree Circumference

Histograms are valuable tools for understanding the distribution pattern of data. They are a type of graph that visually displays the frequency of each value within a dataset in an ordered manner. By using histograms, one can identify the most prevalent and the least frequent values in the dataset. The horizontal axis of a histogram indicates the type of data under consideration, while the vertical axis depicts the number of observations falling within each category.

1. How many trees were in the bin 0-50mm for circumference?
2. What type of data is being collected in this histogram?
3. What was the most prevalent circumference of trees in the dataset?
4. Each bin is plotted as a bar whose height corresponds to how many points are in that bin. There are 5 datapoints in which bin?
5. This graph is bell-shaped, with only one peak, and is symmetric around the mean. It is known as a _____ curve.
