Phonetic knowledge can be assessed in three ways. First, phonograms, or letter-sets in American phonetic alphabets, or letter-sets in other alphabets, like Cyrillic, may be assigned the value of phonemes. It is important to understand that these letters themselves are not the phonemes, but rather represent the phonemes graphically. For example, the letter "a" in the word "cat" is not the phoneme /a/ but rather represents the phoneme /a/. Second, phonemes can be assessed by their distribution in words. For example, the phoneme /a/ can occur in the syllable-initial position in the word "cat" but not in the syllable-final position in the word "cat". Third, phonemes can be assessed by their distribution in words. For example, the phoneme /a/ can occur in the syllable-initial position in the word "cat" but not in the syllable-final position in the word "cat".
