Section 14 Heterogeneous And Homogeneous Mixtures:

Chemical Process Robin Smith, 2005-06-10 This book deals with the design and integration of chemical processes emphasizing the conceptual issues that are fundamental to the creation of the process Chemical process design requires the selection of a series of processing steps and their integration to form a complete manufacturing system The text emphasizes both the design and selection of the steps as individual operations and their integration Also the process will normally operate as part of an integrated manufacturing site consisting of a number of processes serviced by a common utility system The design of utility systems has been dealt with in the text so that the interactions between processes and the utility system and interactions between different processes through the utility system can be exploited to maximize the performance of the site as a whole Chemical processing should form part of a sustainable industrial activity For chemical processing this means that processes should use raw materials as efficiently as is economic and practicable both to prevent the production of waste that can be environmentally harmful and to preserve the reserves of raw materials as much as possible Processes should use as little energy as economic and practicable both to prevent the build up of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere from burning fossil fuels and to preserve reserves of fossil fuels Water must also be consumed in sustainable quantities that do not cause deterioration in the quality of the water source and the long term quantity of the reserves Aqueous and atmospheric emissions must not be environmentally harmful and solid waste to landfill must be avoided Finally all aspects of chemical processing must feature good health and safety practice It is important for the designer to understand the limitations of the methods used in chemical process design The best way to understand the limitations is to understand the derivations of the equations used and the assumptions on which the equations are based Where practical the derivation of the design equations has been included in the text The book is intended to provide a practical guide to chemical process design and integration for undergraduate and postgraduate students of chemical engineering practicing process designers and chemical engineers and applied chemists working in process development Examples have been included throughout the text Most of these examples do not require specialist software and can be performed on spreadsheet software Finally a number of exercises have been added at the end of each chapter to allow the reader to practice the calculation procedures

Lee,flang,Dick R.

Wittink,Michel Wedel,Philippe A. Naert,2013-06-29 This book is about marketing models and the process of model building

Our primary focus is on models that can be used by managers to support marketing decisions. It has long been known that simple models usually outperform judgments in predicting outcomes in a wide variety of contexts. For example, models of judgments tend to provide better forecasts of the outcomes than the judgments themselves because the model eliminates the noise in judgments. And since judgments never fully reflect the complexities of the many forces that influence outcomes, it is easy to see why models of actual outcomes should be very attractive to marketing decision makers. Thus, appropriately constructed models can provide insights about structural relations between marketing variables. Since models explicate the relations, both the process of model building and the model that ultimately results can improve the quality of marketing decisions. Managers often use rules of thumb for decisions. For example, a brand manager will have defined a specific set of alternative brands as the competitive set within a product category. Usually, this set is based on perceived similarities in brand characteristics, advertising messages, etc. If a new marketing initiative occurs for one of the other brands, the brand manager will have a strong inclination to react. The reaction is partly based on the manager's desire to maintain some competitive parity in the marketing variables.
