

Chapter 17: Evolution of Populations

State Standards

Central Concept: Evolution is the result of genetic changes that occur in constantly changing environments. Over many generations, changes in the genetic make-up of populations may affect biodiversity through speciation and extinction.

- 5.2 Describe species as reproductively distinct groups of organisms. Recognize that species are further classified into a hierarchical taxonomic system (kingdom, phylum, class, order, family, genus, species) based on morphological, behavioral, and molecular similarities. Describe the role that geographic isolation can play in speciation.
- 5.3 Explain how evolution through natural selection can result in changes in biodiversity through the increase or decrease of genetic diversity within a population.
- 5.3.1 Make observations, raise questions, and formulate hypotheses.
- Observe the world from a scientific perspective.
 - Pose questions and form hypotheses based upon personal observations, scientific articles, experiments, and knowledge.

You should be able to:

1. Define evolution in genetic terms.
2. State what determines the number of phenotypes for a trait.
3. Explain how natural selection affects single-gene and polygenic traits.
4. Describe genetic drift and list the two examples of genetic drift.
5. Distinguish between directional, stabilizing, and disruptive selection for polygenic traits.
6. Identify the types of isolation that can lead to the formation of new species.
7. Describe the current hypothesis about Galapagos finch speciation.

You should know the difference between:

- Genetic Drift: Bottleneck Effect and Founder Effect
- Single-Gene Traits and Polygenic Traits
- Directional, Stabilizing, and Disruptive Selection
- Reproductive Isolation: Behavioral, Geographic, and Temporal Isolation

The Genetic Structure of Populations A. Jacquard,2012-12-06 It is part of the ideology of science that it is an international enterprise carried out by a community that knows no barriers of nation or culture But the reality is somewhat different Despite the best intentions of scientists to form a single community unseparated by differences of national and political viewpoint they are in fact separated by language Scientific literature in German is not generally assimilated by French workers nor that appearing in French by those whose native language is English The problem appears to have become more severe since the last war because the ascendance of the United States as the preeminent economic power led in a time of big and expensive science to a pre dominance of American scientific production and a growing tendency at least among English speakers to regard English as the international language of science International congresses and journals of world circulation have come more and more to take English as their standard or official language As a result students and scientific workers in the English speaking world have become more linguistically parochial than ever before and have been cut off from a considerable scientific literature Population genetics has been no exception to the rule The elegant and extremely innovative theoretical work of Malecot for example is only now being properly assimilated by population biologists outside France It was therefore with some sense of frustration that I read Prof Study Guide to Accompany Biology, Third Edition, by Arms & Camp Virginia Fry,1987 Environmental Science Michael L.
