Thus Until Emilia Ilieva, Reuben Matheka, 2025-08-04 Thus Until A History of Egerton University is a thorough historical chronological and well researched account of Egerton University from a whites only college when it started in 1939 through to the expansion it has experienced over the years culminating in being a full university More than any other university in Kenya Egerton has a long and colourful history but like all the other universities it has suffered from the political economic and financial challenges of the time especially since the double intake of the 1990s Chapter One provides the required background to the study highlighting agricultural and educational policies and steering away from the Happy Valley hype so characteristic of the period The reader will learn about the Egerton family in Chapter Two and particularly about Lord Egerton himself and the colonial circumstances within which he lived The chapter dispels some of the popularly held myths about him Chapter Three deals with the beginnings of the college and the various structural and curriculum experiments tried out and the kind of enrolment and students it experimented with as an all white establishment The chapter ends with Africans beginning to agitate for change With great attention to detail the later chapters put the university in a broader local and international context thereby increasing its relevance to society A History of Egerton University though heavily footnoted and with a detailed bibliography is written in a simple easy flowing and accessible style BIFAD Briefs United States.

East Africa's Asians: Problems of a displaced minority Yash Tandon, Arnold Raphael, 1984-11-01 While an extended discussion on the issue of minority rights is impossible in a report that deals with one specific case history it is not out of place to raise a few important issues for theoretical debate occasioned by the events under consideration Out of General Amin's peremptory expulsion en masse of some 50 000 Asians from Uganda in August 1972 arises the obvious question of whether the General had overstepped the boundaries of human rights in this case But in order to determine this we have to come to some agreement as to what these rights are and whether these can be deemed to be inherent in minority groups just as they are deemed in liberal theory at least to be inherent in individuals Indeed is there anything called minority rights Are not all rights including protection against discrimination on account of race colour tribe religion language region and class inherent only in the individual Or is a minority's right of protection against summary mass expulsion a special kind of minority right so that it could be argued that while an alien individual of a certain race etc may at times have to be expelled for reasons of state especially if he is involved in a criminal act the same cannot be done to a whole minority community This would lead to a discussion of a different order can an entire community be charged with generalised criminal behaviour And by what process of law may they be tried for that Preceding the Asians expulsion from Uganda General Amin had launched a protracted and vehement attack on the Asian community for their alleged malpractices involving corruption overpricing and undercutting breaches of tax and foreign exchange regulations and so on amounting to economic sabotage of the country Is there a court anywhere one might ask that can try a minority on such a charge And if individual instances might be cited as evidence could the crimes of a few be a sufficient basis for sanctions against a whole community Is there a sense in which a whole minority community can be deemed to be responsible for the crime of a few This presupposes that the community has the means by which to bring to order those of its members whose negligent or criminal behaviour could bring down the house on the entire community Indeed General Amin apparently had implicitly given credence to this supposition In a conference of the Asians that he had called in December 1971 he had uttered his collective charges against them and had asked them to find their own means of correcting their behaviour What did the General have in mind then Did he think that the Asians had the means at their disposal perhaps an informal court to try the culprits and informal social sanctions to bring them to book to correct the situation Or did he then think that in his scheme of things the Asians were doomed anyway no matter what they did These are not speculative questions at all They concern vital issues relating to a determination of criminal behaviour by a whole community that might then provide a reason for their mass expulsion For if such reason for expulsion can be found and be found to be justified then it could still be maintained that a minority community does have a right of protection against mass expulsion except where it may be collectively indicted on a criminal offence The debate on minority rights would then shift its ground Instead of discussing simply minority rights we would then be discussing what constitutes a criminal offence by a community and by what processes of law or justice might this be determined The Asians were accused not only of economic sabotage but also of social exclusivism For example they refused to allow their daughters to marry Africans It was a special or perhaps not so special kind of racial arrogance of the Asians Was that also a crime suitable for punishment by mass expulsion The discussion of minority rights and the legitimacy of mass expulsion in terms of crime and punishment would lead the discussion to the narrow confines of legalistic and jurisprudential concepts Indeed much of the discussion following the expulsion of the Asians from Uganda did take place in these juristic terms But there is another angle to the problem This is related to the whole realm of thought centering round the question of historical justice It goes much beyond the contemporary concepts of collective crime and collective punishment It ties an explanation of contemporary action to a past injustice It would embrace for example the general anti colonial reaction of the colonised peoples of the world against their European powers It would explain to give a particular instance the recovery of Goa by India by means of a quick military victory over Portugal in 1962 The question of historical justice thus raises wider issues than those of contemporary legal norms The overall point of the argument is that whatever the merits of a juridical debate

there are in addition considerations of historical injustice that must enter into the discussions on the situation of the Asians in East Africa and the decision by General Amin to expel them from Uganda The situation is by no means as simple as will resolve itself by a resort to principles of plain morality Quite apart from the question of rights and morals is the purely sociological question of whether the Asian minority has a better future in a state that has declared itself in favour of capitalism like Kenya or one that has opted for socialism like Tanzania In the case of Uganda the issue is no longer worth discussing Uganda under Amin seems to have opted not just for capitalism but for black capitalism By definition then its brown residents whether citizen or not had no future in Uganda The question is still worth discussing with respect to the other states in East Africa Please note that the terminology in the fields of minority rights and indigenous peoples rights has changed over time MRG strives to reflect these changes as well as respect the right to self identification on the part of minorities and indigenous peoples At the same time after over 50 years work we know that our archive is of considerable interest to activists and researchers Therefore we make available as much of our back catalogue as possible while being aware that the language used may not reflect current thinking on these issues
