Name: _____

All cells need cell energy to complete cellular functions and stay alive. The ultimate source of energy for all living things comes from the sun.

Photosynthesis is an important life process that provides more than 99% of the energy used by living things on Earth. The process of photosynthesis captures light energy from the sun and transforms it into chemical energy. The term photosynthesis can be broken down into two root words: photo meaning "light" and synthesis meaning "to put together".

- What energy transformation takes place during photosynthesis?

Type Here Light energy

- What two root words can the term photosynthesis be broken down into?

Type Here Photo meaning light , and synthesis meaning to put together

Photoautotrophs are organisms that can perform photosynthesis to make their own energy using light from the sun. The word photoautotroph is a combination of the term autotroph (an organism that makes its own food), and the prefix photo-, which means "light". Plants, most algae, and cyanobacteria are all examples of photoautotrophs.

Photosynthesis is largely responsible for producing and maintaining the oxygen content of the Earth's atmosphere and supplies most of the energy necessary for life on Earth. During photosynthesis, plants take in carbon dioxide gas from the atmosphere and water from the soil using their roots. Using light energy, photoautotrophs undergo chemical reactions during photosynthesis to produce glucose and oxygen from the carbon dioxide and water. Oxygen is released as a gas into the atmosphere as a byproduct. Oxygen is later used in another cell energy process called cellular respiration. Glucose is used as stored energy in plants and is used to build new plant structures. Chemical energy is stored in the bonds of glucose molecules and is used by the cells of almost every living thing for energy. Animals obtain this energy by eating plants.

- What type of organisms can perform photosynthesis?

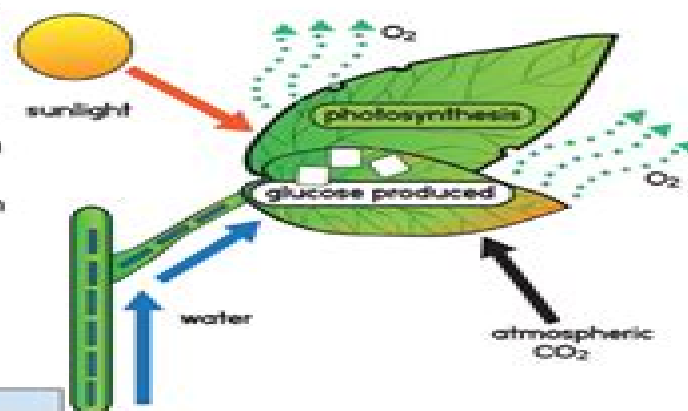

Type Here photoautotrophs

- What is photosynthesis largely responsible for?

Type Here producing and maintaining the oxygen content of the earth's atmosphere and supplies most of the energy necessary for life on earth

- What is glucose used for?

Type Here stored energy in plants and is used to build new plant structures
