

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free-trade agreements, reduction of the trade of governments have the effect of reducing trade barriers, providing for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade barriers have been either removed or reduced, multi-national issues arising from trade, such as the anti-dumping issues, become the focus of international trade agreements. Some of the related trade agreements within the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) include the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), and the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP).

However, barriers to international trade sometimes exist, reducing trade flows that would benefit people in particular countries. In Figure 10, a free-trade line represents the demand-for-the domestic economy as well as the supply of the domestic economy. The domestic supply curve is relatively inelastic. Domestic suppliers are willing and able to produce at other prices, prices of those resources. International trade is represented by Figure 10. The equilibrium price resulting from international trade is  $P_1$ , which is produced only by domestic firms.

International Trade

It shows that international trade has a total supply for domestic the production of domestic goods and services. Domestic suppliers are willing to supply  $Q_1$  and demand  $Q_2$ . They are able to produce more of the domestic good at lower prices. Also at  $P_1$ , domestic firms are producing  $Q_1$  and foreign producers are producing  $Q_2 - Q_1$ . Thus, domestic firms are producing less goods because they have to compete with foreign firms in the international market.
