Supporting Leaders for School Improvement Through Self-Care and Wellbeing Bradley W. Carpenter, Julia Mahfouz, Kerry Robinson, 2024-01-01 School leadership instability is particularly problematic for scholars and practitioners concerned with PK-12 school improvement, as second only to teachers, campus leadership has been identified as a primary factor in students' academic success. Young et al. (2007). Yet while principals play an indispensable role in students' academic success, the job has become considerably more stressful as the role of a school leader continues to evolve. Specifically, added responsibilities, increased work intensity, and the ever-present menace of high-stakes accountability have intensified the stress levels encountered by today's school leaders. Carpenter, Chaplain (2001), Darmody, Wang et al. (2018). This intensification negatively impacts a school's teaching staff and its students, as the overall quality of the school experience can deteriorate if principals are unable to meet their potential due to the burnout and fatigue associated with chronic stress. Darmody, Devos et al. (2007). For principals to fully realize their ability to serve as catalysts for school improvement, they should be allowed to prioritize physical, mental, cognitive, and emotional health. Desired levels of wellbeing occur in the absence of chronic physical, social, psychological, emotional, economic, and cognitive distress. La Placa et al. (2013). As authors in this volume demonstrate, many school leaders have commenced specific practices targeting cognitive, emotional, and behavioral wellbeing to cope with occupational stress and flourish, or at the very least, survive in such a challenging environment. Among coping strategies, leaders have adopted include mindfulness and other wellbeing interventions strategies intended to facilitate healthier lifestyles relieve stress and improve personal resilience Aviles Mahfouz 2018 Wells 2015 Recently there has been a call to consider educational leadership through a positive human flourishing lens Research in this area focuses on integrating wellbeing practices in professional development programs for teachers and school administrators to highlight the positive effects of personal and collective wellbeing in schools Cherkowski Benn et al 2012 Dvor a kova et al 2017 Jennings 2015 Meiklejohn et al 2012 Mahfouz et al 2018 New understandings about the relationship between school administrators wellbeing and school improvement efforts should ignite interest within the field As such this book s chapters are organized into four distinct sections that provide a an overview of the field Section I b an empirical argument for why such research is essential Section II c wellbeing models to be considered for use in the PK 12 setting Section III and d specific wellbeing practices and frameworks currently being in PK 12 Section IV
