1.1 Understanding JD Edwards EnterpriseOne Table Design Aid

The Oracle's JD Edwards EnterpriseOne system uses a relational database. Tables are related using common key fields.

Database tables store the data that is used by applications in columns and rows. Each column is a data item, and each row is a record. You can create custom tables for use in JD Edwards EnterpriseOne applications.

You create tables by selecting data items from the data dictionary and assigning key fields as indices. An index enables a database management system to sort and locate records quickly. You must define a table so that the JD Edwards EnterpriseOne software recognizes that the table exists.

Use JD Edwards EnterpriseOne Table Design Aid to generate the table whenever you:

- Create new tables.
- Add or delete data items.
- Add or modify an index.
