

Local Amusement Park's Design Project

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

It can be stated that the local amusement park's business, as a rule, is characterized by seasonality. This kind of entertainment involves maximum attendance at the weekends as during the week it is rather low (Rabinovitz 163). However, the proposed project will be located in the open air; consequently, the main factor for the attendance will be the weather conditions. The main consumers in the market are families with or without children and younger adults. It is necessary to consider various issues to be able to evaluate the prospective success of the proposal.

Background

Due to the current trends in the amusement park business, there are several problems and difficulties associated with the embodiment of the project. The reduction in the flow of investment and the overall decline in economic growth hurts the development of this area; thus, its popularity is constantly decreasing (Coleman 219). Also, the gradual strengthening of the competition, in particular, the proliferation of computer game parlors leaves little room for the survival of the non-network projects. Also, the overall slowdown in demand for the services in this market is reflected in a lower attendance of the target audience.

In this regard, it is necessary to implement such a project, which will take into account the existing conditions, will open the prospect of development, and will be competitive in the market (Kuniavsky, Goodman and Moed 15).

It can be assumed that the development of Fall'n Twist 12 will respond to the requirements set by the current setting and situation in the market. It will be capable of raising twelve people to a height of twelve meters. The design project will be represented by an air-powered drop and twist tower that would belong to the class of family rides, and its mount type will be either a portable or a park model. Its main characteristics will be compactness, portability, and reliability.
