

PROPERTY MANAGEMENT FEES: WHAT LANDLORDS SHOULD KNOW

1 General Fee

The most common way property managers charge is through a percentage of the monthly rent, typically between 8-10%. This means that if the unit isn't rented out, the landlord does not pay the fee.

2 Advertising Fee

Property vacancies cost money, so it may be worthwhile to look into paid advertising. Establish who covers these fees, and limits to this cost.

3 Set-up Fee

This fee covers setting up a new tenant for a new or existing property.

4 Unpaid Invoice Fee

This comes as a service charge (1-2%) for any unpaid invoice.

5 Reserve Fund Fee

Reserve fund fees can range from $150-$550 for a single family property, for example. They cover day-to-day expenses.

6 Cancellation Fee

This is often charged if the landlord terminates the property manager contract early.

7 Renewal Fee

This fee can be anywhere from $0-$200 if the property manager needs to do paperwork surrounding renewing a lease. This should be a very low fee (if at all) since the process is simple. Landlords and tenants should understand who is responsible for these fees, if any.

8 Eviction Fee

In the case of an unfortunate event of evicting tenants, property managers could charge hourly rates ($30-$50) on top of a flat fee ($400-$700) for the entire eviction process for dealing with lawyers, court appearances, and communicating with tenants. Establish if the who is responsible for finding the attorney, and whether there are limits to these costs.

9 Maintenance Fee

Agree on the process of performing and charging for maintenance and repairs. Some options would be to establish a limit ($50-$100) on maintenance that the property manager doesn't need to notify the landlord. Some landlords require managers to always check in with a price estimate before performing the repair. Also, the landlord and manager should establish if there are already trusted contractors to always go to. Have these in your AbodeStory contractor contacts page.
