

Quantitative Article Critique:

This article examined some of the issues that affect youths with visual impairments as they transition from high school or college to employment. The researchers first mentioned that the transition from school to employment is a topic that is often discussed, but little research has been done to identify the variables that impact the transition process for youths with visual impairments (Capella-McDonnall & Cradden, 2009, p. 329). The rationale and the purpose of the study were never clearly stated. Perhaps the lack of research could be considered the rationale, but it would have been helpful to have more information justifying this study. Also concerning was that statement of the problem was never clearly written. In order to identify the problem, the authors should have cited information that emphasized the high rate of unemployment for youths with visual impairments. A study by Nagle (2001) is an excellent example of citing unemployment rates for youths with visual impairments. That information could have nicely transitioned into a purpose statement for this study.

Review of the Literature

Following the introduction, the researchers used the review of the literature to define the variables as well as explain how those variables have been previously studied. That helped me gather a better understanding of the amount of research that had been done on each variable. I also gained an idea of the direction of the study and what the authors wanted to analyze. This was especially helpful since the introduction did not state the purpose of the study.
