Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a supervised aerobic and resistance training program three times per week for six weeks. The control group did not participate in any structured exercise program. Physical fitness was assessed by measuring heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and waist circumference. HRQL was assessed by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly lower heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index, and waist circumference compared to the control group at the end of the six-week period. Additionally, the exercise group had significantly higher scores on the SF-36 questionnaire compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 6-week training program can improve physical fitness and HRQL in sedentary middle-aged women.

the authors of the study. The authors also note that the study was limited by the fact that the data were self-reported and that the study did not include a control group.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 male employees from three companies. Data were collected by means of a self-administered questionnaire. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among non-manual workers than manual workers. The results also indicated that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers who had been employed for more than 10 years compared to those who had been employed for less than 10 years.

THESE RESULTS ARE IN ACCORD WITH THE FINDINGS OF OTHER STUDIES THAT
