

4.1: Daily Video 1 (Skill 6.4)

A system is defined as an object or a collection of objects.

The objects are treated as having no internal structure.

Interactions can occur between the objects within a system or between objects of different systems.

Interactions can occur in two ways:

A force is exerted by objects outside the system or between objects within the system.

A transfer/exchange of some quantity with objects outside the system or between objects within the system

The system is chosen by the person analyzing the problem or situation

4.2: Daily Video 1 (Skill 7.2)

Work and Mechanical Energy

The amount of work done is based on the amount of force, F , applied to the object and the displacement, d

If the force and displacement are in the same direction (remember that both force and displacement are vector quantities), the amount of work is equal to the product of the magnitude (amount) of force and the magnitude of displacement

Based on the equation $W = Fd\cos\theta$, work can be positive, negative, or zero depending on the angle.

If the angle is 90° , then the cosine = 0. This means that if the angle between the force and displacement is 90° , the amount of work done is 0 J (no work is done)
