Capstone Reflection Paper

I have always been interested in the sciences, with this project I was able to do research and learn about COVID-19, which has drastically changed the way we live today. With the dream to become a doctor, I have always loved to assist others, being able to spread awareness and valuable information to others gives me a feeling of accomplishment. Another aspect I have been interested in is coding. In recent years we have learnt the basics of coding in python, but for this project, I wanted to discover a completely different coding aspect, though HTML is not a coding language, it is a language used to create websites. HTML stands for Hypertext Markup Language. I chose to use this markup language to challenge myself instead of doing it the easy way and using a premade website maker, like Weebly or Wix. Also, completing this project helped by expanded my views on potential careers I could possibly be interested in for the future.

I have never been the best when it comes to understanding computer terms, and one challenge that took a lot of mental strain out of me was finding a way to publish my website for others to look at. Though it seems like an easy task to be done, in one day, I spent over an hour going through multiple websites, lots of videos and even downloaded many different applications to try and find one that I understood and that worked. Looking through each one took some time as most of them spoke with terms that were not familiar and I struggled to understand what some of them meant. After that time I was very flustered and decided to call it a day, I took some time to relax to recollect myself. The next day I went in with fresh eyes and in the first video I watched, I understood and followed their instructions, and I was finally able to publish my website.

During this project, I have acquired many skills, including a new skill, coding HTML. I used my analyzing, critical thinking and time-management skills as well. This project has not let me master any of these skills as mastering critical thinking skills is next to impossible, but it has helped me to improve all of those useful skills that will be helpful in the future. As for learning to code in HTML, with this timeline, I was only able to learn the basics, but if I continue, I will be able to master it. Coding HTML is quite repetitive and only requires you to remember multiple complex attributes. I used my critical thinking skills to teach myself how to code HTML, testing the code I wrote as well as finding the small errors here and there. Analyzing skills were used to research and taking notes on the information I included on my website. As for time-management, during the beginning of this course I procrastinated
