

Instructor Manual for Neonatal Resuscitation™

The Instructor Manual for Neonatal Resuscitation has been totally revised to reflect the changes in the new NRP™ educational methodology, and assist NRP instructors as they integrate simulation-based learning into NRP courses.

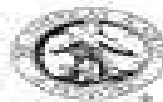

Ten chapters cover course information relevant to NRP instructors at all experience levels. Chapters include details on the changing role of the NRP instructor and learner, an explanation about NRP course format changes, and information on the new requirements for NRP provider and instructor courses. Suggestions on how to set up a classroom and organize supplies and equipment for a typical hospital-based training program are included in the manual. A detailed diagram illustrates one configuration for an NRP provider course in a conference room and numerous photos illustrate suggestions for Performance Skills Station setups and strategies for NRP equipment organization and maintenance. The Instructor Manual for Neonatal Resuscitation includes checklists and sample course documents to help instructors conduct useful scenarios and effective debriefings.

Every chapter features an NRP instructor self-assessment, which evaluates the instructor's understanding of key points outlined in each chapter. "The self-assessment is a new addition to the Instructor Manual. It provides NRP instructors and instructor candidates with the opportunity to double-check their knowledge of NRP materials, course curricula, and instructor responsibilities and encourages the instructor to think about how suggested strategies could be implemented in their setting," said Jeanette Zaichkin, editor of the Instructor Manual.

Simulation and debriefing are new skills for most NRP instructors. Sophisticated electronic equipment is not required to implement the new NRP education methodology and the Instructor Manual includes many suggestions for cost-effective implementation of simulation-based learning using supplies and equipment that most hospitals already own. The Instructor Manual is a valuable tool for NRP instructors and instructor candidates who wish to create quality courses focused on hands-on learning, immersive simulation, and constructive debriefing.
