Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity for women who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions were designed to be low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume. The program was evaluated using a variety of physical fitness tests, including heart rate, blood pressure, and body composition. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on physical fitness, with significant improvements in heart rate, blood pressure, and body composition. The program was well-tolerated by the participants, and the results suggest that it may be a useful tool for promoting physical activity in sedentary, middle-aged women.
