

Liquid Pressure (Class)

Activity 1

The liquid pressure at a point is dependent on the depth down. At any particular depth, pressure depends on the atmospheric pressure at the top plus a constant dependent on the fluid at that depth. The constant depends on the fluid's density and height. Atmospheric pressure itself is not uniform, but it is almost independent of altitude up to about 1000 m, where it begins to decrease significantly. Atmospheric pressure varies with altitude and with weather, depending on local atmospheric conditions.

Liquid with free surface

liquid pressure is atmospheric pressure

The liquid pressure at a particular depth is the same, and constant, and is independent of the size of the container, depending only on the depth.

Each liquid will find its free point where the liquid pressure equals the atmospheric pressure. Standard atmospheric pressure is defined as the liquid density times the height of the liquid column above the liquid surface. The liquid surface that liquid pressure equals the atmospheric pressure is called the free surface of the liquid.

Water is approximately equal to  $1.0 \times 10^3 \text{ kg/m}^3$ . Water surface where the liquid pressure is equal to 101.3 kPa, standard atmospheric pressure, the pressure at 101.3 kPa.

If the water is contained in a container, the atmospheric pressure at the surface of the water is the same. For example, if the atmospheric pressure is 101.3 kPa, the water surface is at a height of 10.1 m above the bottom of the container.
