During the Renaissance, Christians from all levels of society grew impatient with the corruption of the clergy and the worldliness of the Roman Catholic Church. In the 1500s, the movement for reform unleashed forces that would shatter Christian unity in Europe. This reform movement is known as the Protestant Reformation. Beginning in the late Middle Ages, the Church had become increasingly caught up in worldly affairs. They plotted against powerful monarchs who tried to seize control of the Church within their lands. Like other Renaissance rulers, popes were patrons of the arts. They hired painters and sculptors to beautify churches and spent vast sums to rebuilt the Cathedral of St. Peter in Rome. To finance such projects, the Church increased fees for services such as marriages and baptisms.

Some clergy also promoted the sale of indulgences. An indulgence was a type of pardon that lessened the time of punishment a soul faced for sins committed in a person's lifetime. In the Middle Ages, the Church had granted indulgences only for good deeds. By the late 1400s, however, indulgences could be bought with money or a gift to the Church. Many Christians protested such practices and stressed Bible study and urged a return to the simplicity of the early Christian church.
