Johnson, 2015-07-28 The working title of my novel was Metamorphosis for transmutation was the vehicle by which I intended to explore the concept of identity There is abundant research on the effects of nature and nurture and their repercussions on personality development It is well documented that our genes dictate our traits and that our exposure to experiences in the world mould

our attitudes principles and morals which in turn enable the intellect to forge and govern our attitudes and behaviour Our identities the perceptions others have of them and the perception we have of the perception others have of them carry a huge burden The weak often struggle with the paranoia of self identity the strong appear to glide through life unaffected but often paddle furiously in deep running waters My thesis embraces a belief in universal self doubt and the tenuous grasp we have on the nature and structure of our existence and on how we define ourselves within this context It explores by means of control experiment transmutation the reference points of our existence both the unwarranted pride and abhorrence we recognise in ourselves and above all the enigma that is our identity
