

Uniforms in Public Schools: Benefits and Drawbacks

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Although pros and cons of public schools implementing uniforms are contentious, their benefits outweigh their drawbacks as when students wear similar clothes, disparities among them are minimized, and they effectively focus on learning. In the US, school uniforms have increasingly been adopted by learning institutions countrywide (Baumann and Krskova 1010).

However, some schools disagree with the need for learners to wear uniforms and, in their place, choose to encourage a dress code while others allow students to dress in clothes of their choice provided that they look decent. Arguments in support of school uniforms affirm that they generate a favorable learning environment, symbolize discipline, and instill pride regarding the institution while people in their disfavor believe that they interfere with learners' creativity and comfort hence they should not be implemented.

There are numerous challenges that learning institutions experience in modern times. Some of the problems include violence, learners' constant worry about failure to fit in a given group, and loss of focus on learning, the principal objective of being in school. When many learners concentrate on what they should wear the next day instead of their studies and assigned homework, the quality of education will be negatively affected.

Peer pressure, monetary struggle, fear of not being as expensively dressed as others in the school, and daily fashion fights are some of the factors that affect the overall concentration that students have on learning. Not only do learners worry about fitting in, but also do parents feel concerned about their children. Eradication of the need to keep purchasing new fashions each season for learners will act as a monetary relief and a solution to psychological disturbances (Baumann and Krskova 1016).

If all students wear similar clothes, there is a high likelihood of reducing stealing because uniform clothing and accessories would not be as envious as when there is no standardization. In countries that value freedom of expression, the actual liberty to learn might be established in the implementation of school uniforms. Uniforms assist in
