

The Evolution of Populations

- Outcomes of Natural Selection:

- Directional Selection: the selective pressure only selects a certain phenotype
 - Common when a population's environment changes or members migrate to different habitats
- Stabilizing Selection: The most extreme phenotypes are eliminated
 - Ex: birth weights, birth weight is typically around 6-8 lbs.
- Disruptive Selection: The most extreme phenotypes are selected for, typically when environmental conditions vary in a way that favors individuals at both ends of the phenotypic spectrum

- Limits of evolution by natural selection:

- Populations can adapt to a change in environmental conditions only if the necessary genetic traits are already present in a population's gene pool
- Even if there is a beneficial trait in a population, the population's ability to adapt may be limited by its reproductive capacity.

- INCORRECT ideas about natural selection:

- "survival of the fittest" meaning strongest
- Organisms develop certain traits because they need them
- Evolution by natural selection involves some grand plan of nature in which species become perfectly adapted.
