

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods of governments have free trade across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there have been various international trade wars, with significant changes during the 1990s. Examples of these wars include the United States–Mexico Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the European Union (EU), and the North Atlantic Trade Agreement (NATO).

However, there are some countries that are not free to trade with each other. Some countries have a policy of protectionism, which is a policy of restricting international trade. Some countries have a policy of free trade, which is a policy of allowing international trade. The difference between the two is that protectionism is a policy of restricting international trade, while free trade is a policy of allowing international trade.
