Short-Run Production Functions: Aggregate

Short-Run and Supply

Microeconomic theory is based on aggregate supply. The industry is considered the aggregate production function, which is determined by the price of output and the price of each input.

Under an aggregate supply, the aggregate level of output and the price level are determined by the following factors:

2. Input prices: The price of each input, which is determined by the price of each input and the price of each input.

3. Output prices: The price of output, which is determined by the price of output and the price of each input.

4. Government: The government, which is determined by the price of output and the price of each input.

The short-run aggregate supply curve is determined by the price of output and the price of each input. The short-run aggregate supply curve is determined by the price of output and the price of each input.
