Your hospital is staffed by several people skilled in neonatal resuscitation. Most of them have additional responsibilities away from the delivery room, and you alone are called to the delivery area at this time. While extra people may be useful, when should you first start to recruit additional help? - When you anticipate the likely need for more advanced resuscitation based on the presence of any of the known perinatal risk factors.

You have determined that a baby needs resuscitation at birth. What are the initial steps of resuscitation? - Provide warmth, position head to open the airway, dry and stimulate.

Your hospital is planning NRP training and trying to decide who should be included. For every delivery, who should be available? - Someone capable of initiating resuscitation should be present at every delivery and available to care for the baby.
