- Some scholars believe that the most likely source was the political group's "Bitterness Theory," which argues that ethnic minorities have been discriminated against by the government and that they are returning to their traditional culture and language for protection.
 - Other scholars believe that the most likely source was the government's policy of assimilation, which forced ethnic minorities to abandon their traditional culture and language in favor of Chinese.
 - Some scholars believe that the most likely source was the government's policy of assimilation, which forced ethnic minorities to abandon their traditional culture and language in favor of Chinese.
 - While the government is attempting to maintain its traditional culture, there are some who believe that the government's policies and practices have led to the decline of traditional culture and language.

- These general statements were followed by two specific questions from the interview:
"What are your main concerns about your child's future?" and "What are your main concerns about your child's present situation?"

The following table summarizes the results of the experiments.

- These results indicate that the relationship between the two measures of social support and the outcome measure is not as strong as might be expected.
