

Lifespan Development

Study Guide for Exam 1

Developmental Psychology: the discipline that studies the physical, cognitive, social, and emotional development of humans.

Developmental stages:

1. Developmental periods: broadest of life course, identifying major physical and psychological systems and structures in selected emerging functional domains (biological and cognitive) and social settings (family, peer, culture, and).
2. Child stages: 1st period of growth and development, characterized by rapid physical growth, maturation of some systems involved in psychological and biological processes, and the environment being centered around specific events within psychological and biological systems of processes (developmental period for social engagement, social skills, etc.).
3. Adolescence: 2nd period of life course, beginning with physical and psychological systems and structures in social and biological processes, and social engagement, social skills, etc.
4. Young adults: 3rd period, characterized by physical and psychological systems and structures in social and biological processes, and social engagement, social skills, etc.
5. Adulthood: 4th period, characterized by physical and psychological systems and structures in social and biological processes, and social engagement, social skills, etc.

Developmental research:

1. Longitudinal research: study of individual development over time (or across time) within biological, psychological, and social domains, comparing individual development of those who are the same or not, the research methodology and analysis (the range of developmental stages).
2. Experimental research design: in experimental research design, the researcher manipulates one or more variables (e.g., physical and psychological) and measures the resulting changes in the dependent variable (e.g., physical and psychological).
3. Correlational research: in correlational research, the researcher measures the relationship between two or more variables (e.g., physical and psychological) and measures the resulting changes in the dependent variable (e.g., physical and psychological).
