

Unit-4: Wireless LAN

Introduction of Wireless LAN

- It is a network that allows devices to connect and communicate wirelessly.
- Unlike a traditional wired LAN, in which devices communicate over Ethernet cables, devices on a WLAN communicate via Wi-Fi.
- Mobile users can access information and network resources through wireless LAN as they attend meetings, collaborate with other users, or move to other locations in the premises.
- WLAN is not a replacement for the wired infrastructure. It implemented as an extension to a wired LAN within a building or campus. Wireless LAN is commercially known as WiFi or Wi-Fi.
- Wi-Fi is an acronym for Wireless Fidelity.
- In the corporate enterprise, wireless LANs are usually implemented as the final link between the existing wired network and a group of client computers, giving these users wireless access to the full resources and services of the corporate network across a building or campus setting.

Wireless LAN advantages:

- Availability of low-cost portable equipment: Due to the technology enhancements, the equipment cost that are required for WLAN set-up have reduced a lot.
- Mobility: An increasing number of LAN users are becoming mobile. These mobile users require that they are connected to the network regardless of where they are because they want simultaneous access to the network.
- This makes the use of cables, or wired LANs, impractical if not impossible. Wireless LAN can provide users mobility, which is likely to increase productivity, user convenience and various service opportunities.
- Installation speed and simplicity: Wireless LANs are very easy to install. There is no requirement for wiring every workstation and every room.
- This ease of installation makes wireless LANs inherently flexible. If a workstation must be moved, it can be done easily and without additional wiring, cable drops or reconfiguration of the network.
- Installation flexibility: If a company moves to a new location, the wireless system is much easier to move than ripping up all of the cables that a wired system would have snaked throughout the building.
- This also provides portability. Wireless technology allows network to go anywhere wire cannot reach.
- Reduced cost of ownership: While the initial cost of wireless LAN can be higher than the cost of wired LAN hardware, it is envisaged that the overall installation expenses and life cycle costs can be significantly lower.
