Towing

Use a towing bar which should be connected to the towing device on the machine as shown in the Fig.

The lifting eyelets must not be used for towing.

- Towing device

When towing, the diesel engine should, if possible, be running to make the brakes and steering operational.

The towing machine must be at least as heavy as the towed machine and have sufficient engine power and braking capacity to pull and brake both machines on any inclines which will be encountered.

Always tow the shortest possible distance, otherwise the hydrostatic transmission may be damaged.

At a towing distance exceeding 10 km (6 miles), or at a speed above 10 km/h (6 mph), both front and rear propeller shafts must be removed, or alternatively the machine should be moved on a trailer.

After towing, the machine should be placed on level ground, the parking brake applied and the wheels chocked, before the towbar is disconnected.
