

Flute Warm-up

1. Long notes are an essential starting point in any flute warm-up. They bring the instrument to a proper playing temperature whilst gently activating embouchure, diaphragm, fingers and brain. Before assembling your flute practise playing long tones on the head joint of the instrument with the fullest tone possible. Then assemble the instrument and begin with this exercise. Play mp throughout to begin, then repeat adding written dynamics. Hold the pauses until your diaphragm is completely empty.

2. Expanding the register downwards. Produce the best possible tone on the first note and aim to reproduce its quality as you play. Play mp throughout to begin, then repeat adding written dynamics.

3. Warming-up the middle register, long note exercise. Play mp throughout to begin, then repeat adding written dynamics. Play all of the exercises that follow with a metronome.

Very slow

4. Embouchure flexibility—preparing the high register with ascending harmonics.

Very slow
