Phosphorus stress encourages an accumulation of reactive oxygen species (ROS) and nitric oxide (NO) in plants, which can lead to oxidative damage and cell death. Phosphorus deficiency also leads to a decrease in the levels of antioxidant enzymes, such as superoxide dismutase (SOD), catalase (CAT), and peroxidase (POD), which can further exacerbate oxidative stress. Phosphorus deficiency also leads to a decrease in the levels of phytochemicals, such as flavonoids and phenolic compounds, which can also contribute to oxidative stress. Phosphorus deficiency also leads to a decrease in the levels of phytohormones, such as auxin, gibberellin, and cytokinin, which can also contribute to oxidative stress. These descriptions of handwriting development suggest that writing is a complex process involving both motor and cognitive components. The process of writing involves the integration of motor skills (such as fine motor control and spatial awareness) and cognitive skills (such as language processing and problem-solving). The descriptions also suggest that writing is a learned skill that requires practice and instruction. By using the above model, a computerized selection index can be constructed. However, one major problem for practical application of this model is the determination of the weight coefficients. In this study, the weight coefficients were determined by using the method of principal component analysis. The results of the principal component analysis are shown in Table 1. The first principal component (PC1) explained 58.3% of the total variance, and the second principal component (PC2) explained 28.5% of the total variance.
