

Swiftkey vs Swype

In its Jellybean 4.2 version, Android introduced gesture-based typing which means one can type by sliding a finger from one key to another without lifting the finger. But there exist many other third-party apps that provide this feature including other interesting features and such two apps are Swiftkey Flow and Swype.

Swiftkey Flow is an on-screen keyboard which adapts to the way you type and predicts the words as it figures out your typing styles from your texts in SMS, Facebook, WhatsApp etc. It was released in the Swiftkey 4 update on February 20, 2013 and is currently the Editor's choice in the Play store. The newest version which is Swiftkey 5.0.5.95 comes with customization features which include Emoji and Emoji Prediction, over 30 colorful themes and supports over 60 languages.

The one feature that sets apart Swiftkey Flow is its "Flow through space" feature. This allows the user to type an entire sentence without lifting their fingers.

Swype had released in the market in April, 2013. Initially it was available only for Android phones, but recently it has been made available for iOS also. In its latest version, it allows the user the choice to pick their own keyboard style: Swiping, typing, writing or speaking. It supports around 71 languages and 20 dialects.
