By The Teacher Next Door

When teachers talk about the joys of teaching, they usually say they aren't talking about report card writing. It may just rank right up there with minor recess, yard duty, and stuff meetings. But report cards don't have to be such a pain. There are a few report card general principles, followed by my handy dandy list of suitable go-to phrases.

Three Report Card Principles

1. Be Truthful but Kind

A report card's main purpose is to inform parents about their child's progress. While there should be no major surprises (80% means should have already been discussed with the child's parents), regardless of how well the child is doing or how poorly, the report card should be an honest reflection of that child's performance. Being real and that, of course, we want to word things in a way that is as positive as we can be and in a way that is encouraging, offering suggestions for improvement, rather than discouragement.

2. Follow the Progress Format

If the child is doing well overall, you are golden. An easy report card is one that I (LND) do as often as possible. Not all kids are learners or angels, and we have to mention some areas that need improvement. That's when we use the progress format, which is:
