Read the text and do the activities.

A lot of newspapers are printed every day in England. There are two kinds of newspapers there – morning news and evening news. People read the news in the morning when they go to work, and in the evening when they come back home. Newspapers are sold at the stations and in the street. Some people get them at home. In the morning, they read news at breakfast time.

The Chichester Observer is sold in Chichester, but you can buy the Guardian everywhere in England and in a lot of other countries. The Guardian is printed in Manchester. There are different sorts of interesting articles in the Guardian. Some are about women, clothes and gardening. Others speak about weather, TV programs, sports and teaching.

How is the Guardian produced? Hundreds of journalists work in a lot of countries, in every part of the world. What is happening in the world? The journalists can answer this question. They write articles for the Guardian. These articles are sent to the Manchester office. They arrive by telegram or telephone. In Manchester, the editor and his team must choose the best articles. This is a very difficult job. But they must choose the most important news too. This is the most difficult job. And if an article is too short or too long, somebody must write it again. All the articles must be ready for eleven. In the office, everybody is very busy, but the editor is the busiest man...
