setting in rural southern England to the raw and turbulent northern town of Milton Margaret takes an instant dislike to her new home and its people She hates the dirt noise and lack of civilisation Her distaste extends to handsome and charismatic cotton mill owner John Thornton whom she believes epitomises everything unpleasant about the North However as Margaret gradually begins to settle in Milton she learns about the poverty and workplace struggles As events conspire to throw Margaret and Thornton together the two spirited characters have to overcome their repressed physical attraction for one another and conquer prejudices of class and circumstance The passion and the history embedded in this narrative is as appealing and engrossing today as when it was first published
