

WINTER STORAGE CHECKLIST

Taking extra time to store the boat properly at the end of each season will increase the chances of satisfactory service at the next season. Remember, storage is the greatest enemy of an outboard motor. The unit should be run on a monthly basis. The boat steering and shifting mechanisms should also be worked through complete cycles several times each month. If a small amount of time is spent in such maintenance, the reward will be satisfactory performance, increased longevity and greatly reduced maintenance expenses.

For many years there has been the widespread belief simply shutting off the fuel at the tank and then running the powerhead until it stops is the proper procedure before storing the engine for any length of time. Right? WRONG!

First, it is not possible to remove all fuel in the carburetor by operating the powerhead until it stops. Considerable fuel is trapped in the float chamber and other passages and in the line leading to the carburetor. The only guaranteed method of removing all fuel is to take the time to remove the carburetors, and drain the fuel.

Proper storage involves adequate protection of the unit from physical damage, rust, corrosion, and dirt. The following steps provide an adequate maintenance program for storing the unit at the end of a season.

1. Squirt a small quantity of engine oil into each spark plug hole and crank the engine over to distribute the oil around the engine internals. Reinstall the old spark plugs (you will install new spark plugs in the spring).

2. Drain all fuel from the carburetor float bowls. On fuel injected models, drain the fuel from the vapor separator.

3. Drain the fuel tank and the fuel lines. Store the fuel tank in a cool dry area with the vent OPEN to allow air to circulate through the tank. Do not store the fuel tank on bare concrete. Place the tank to allow air to circulate around it.

4. Change the fuel filter.

5. Drain, and then fill the lower unit with new lower unit gear oil.

6. Lubricate the throttle and shift linkage and the steering pivot shaft.

7. Clean the outboard unit thoroughly. Coat the powerhead with a commercial corrosion and rust preventative spray. Install the cowling, and then apply a thin film of fresh engine oil to all painted surfaces.

8. Remove the propeller. Apply Perfect Seal® or a waterproof sealer to the propeller shaft splines, and then install the propeller back in position.

9. Be sure all drain holes in the gear housing are open and free of obstructions. Check to be sure the flush plug has been removed to allow all the water to drain. Trapped water could freeze, expand, and cause expensive castings to crack.

10. Always store the outboard unit off the boat with the lower unit below the powerhead to prevent any water from being trapped inside.

11. Be sure to consult your owner's manual for any particular storage procedures applicable to your specific model.

SPRING COMMISSIONING CHECKLIST

• See Figures 83 thru 86

A spring tune-up is essential to getting the most out of your engine. If the engine has been properly winterized, it is usually no problem to get it in top running condition again in the springtime. If the engine has just been put in the garage and forgotten for the winter, then it is doubly important to do a complete tune up before putting the engine back into service. If you have ever been stranded out on the water because your engine has died, and you had to suffer the embarrassment of having to be towed back to the marina, now is the time to prevent that from occurring.
