

Pathological reactions to adverse life events are frequent mental disorders. However, it has become increasingly clear that current clinical descriptions and diagnostic classifications, which subsume all such reactions under terms such as "Posttraumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD)" or "reactive and adjustment disorder," are inadequate.

One widely seen type of pathological reaction can be classified as "Posttraumatic Embitterment Disorder (PTED)." Like PTSD, this disorder is characterized not by a particular type of stressful events, but by a distinct psychological process (experiences of injustice and violation of basic beliefs) and by a highly specific psychopathological profile (embitterment and intrusions). While the incidence of PTSD rises in times of danger, such as war, PTED is seen more frequently in times of societal changes which force people to cope with reorganizations of their lives and prospects. PTED can result in very severe symptoms, leading to disability in almost all areas of life, may be life threatening because of suicidal and/or homicidal fantasies, often runs a chronic course, and can be extremely difficult to treat.

This ground-breaking book provides the first comprehensive description of PTED, how it arises, how it can be diagnosed, and promising treatment approaches. The authors first summarize the theoretical background for reactive and adjustment disorders. They then describe the psychological processes involved in coping with insults and with events resulting in humiliation and injustice. Data on the epidemiology of embitterment in the general population and in several patient groups are reported. Diagnostic criteria, diagnostic interviews, and self-rating scales are presented. Finally, promising innovative avenues for treatment are described, based on new concepts from wisdom psychology. An appendix provides diagnostic checklists and tools for treatment planning with PTED patients, which are suitable for use by both researchers and clinicians.

This ground-breaking book is of interest to researchers and clinicians working in the field of posttraumatic and adjustment disorders, as well as to forensic psychologists and psychiatrists who may have to give expert opinions in cases involving trauma.
