

Design and Function

General

The engines have a pressurised lubrication system containing a full flow oil filter, an oil cooler and piston cooling.

The TAMD 63 also has a by-pass oil filter for the lubrication oil. (The by-pass oil filter is an optional extra for the other engines.)

The oil pump is located at the front of the sump, and is driven by the crankshaft, via an idler wheel. The pump sucks up oil from the sump and forces it out into two oil galleries in the cylinder block, via the oil filter, to the lubrication points in the engine, via the piston cooling valve and the oil cooler to the piston cooling nozzles.

All bearings, the gudgeon pins and the bearings of the valve mechanism and gear wheel drives are connected to the pressure lubrication system. The injection pump and turbocharger are also connected to the pressure lubrication system.

The gear wheel drives are lubricated by splash from the idler wheel bearing, which is connected to the main oil gallery by drillings.

The illustration below shows the lubrication system of the TAMD 61, -62 and TAMD 71, -72.
