

Descriptive Essay - Place

I cannot say that I have not traveled a lot. I went to different countries and saw many man-made wonders. I also have seen natural wonders and these I like the most. Until now I have seen only two landscapes which are by far my favorites.

Even though my father worked in Greece I have never been there more than two times: first, with my mother when I was rather young and the second time with my uncle and my aunt, last summer.

And it all happened last summer. We rented a flat in a village named Vrahati. The best part was the flat was near the seashore. So near that I only had to go across the road and I've had already sinked my feet in the smooth sand; I could hear the joyful cries of the children playing in the water, cries fighting to cover the noise made by passing seagulls and discover the brightness of the blinding sun which was hitting everyone with its powerful rays of heat and light.

It felt as if I was dreaming. It was a dream from which I have never wanted to wake up from. Now, if I close my eyes I can still remember the waves crashing on the beach, coming closer and closer as if they were jealous I was enjoying only the heat of the sun and did not want to feel their calm, cold and salty waters.

Every time I was preparing to enter the water I was staying and listening for all those noises that were crashing into my ear-drums and feeling all those things that were stimulating my senses, making me drunk with happiness and joy.

And every time I was going back home I was promising myself that the next morning I would come even earlier so I could see the rising of the sky's king. A king who shines and who loves to admire himself in the water's mirror every day.

Next day at half past five in the morning was sitting on the seashore and waiting for the king's arrival.

Before him, like servants, hundreds of boats were crossing his mirror as they wanted to clean it of fish which disturbed its perfect polish. The fish were then imprisoned in the fish market -not far away from where I was- which's stench I could hardly smell.

He was not late like he never is. Throwing his first spears of light, with which he fought and put the night on the run, he also announces his arrival. Like an orchestra the roasters welcome him and cry signals that let everybody know the sun is back on his throne.

During the week I spent there I was shown that clouds did not dare to stay before the sun. Instead, they were chasing one another along the horizon. It was magical.
